CHAPTER 6
CONCLUSION

6.1 Conclusion

Based on the results of the tests that have been carried out, there are several conclusions obtained:

1. The application has been created where the application takes contacts from Google, users can edit or create new contacts that are connected to the Google account. So that this application can be useful in storing contact data.

2. This contact application has been created but on the web, so developing into Android is easily accessible and understood by many people.

3. Contacts that have been updated and stored automatically are also stored on Google accounts.

6.2 Suggestions

Based on the contact application made, there are similar research suggestions in the future is when creating a project that uses the API from Google, an authentication is needed so that all applications can log in using a Google account, but the Google console does not find it. So it uses the help of firebase to retrieve authentication access, which in the future firebase will be connected directly by the google console.
