

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION

Using the psychological approach, it is found that Anna is an extraordinary child. We can analyze Anna as an extraordinary child because of her knowledge about God. In general the main discussion in this psychological part is that Anna's development stage and faith development are in higher stage than other children's of her age, but Anna's moral development but Anna's moral development is still immature in the way she does not obey the majority of the rules. She still learns about right or wrong.

Through Mister God, This is Anna; Fynn(the writer) wants to explore his idea about religion understanding with Anna's mouth. Through the novel; Fynn wants to explore his idea about religion understanding. The concept of religion life is different from one person to others since it depends on their own spiritual experience.

From the explanation above, it can be concluded that Anna is an extraordinary child who wants to give the color of social life through her maturity in understanding the faith, and the relationship between man and the creator. She also highlights about how religion sometimes make people lose their nature thought about relation between God and human, and other creation. She also highlights that the institutional religion sometimes make people forget about what faith is.

Anna's character also can be analyzed as a satire toward religious people. Because of her thought her faith maturity is more mature than adults people. With Anna's concept, Fynn [the author] criticizes the practice of religion teaching. In history of religion, billions of people have been dead, because they fought to defend their religion, for example in Cross War; Catholic and Muslim, fought each other to defend their religion and they always bring the name of God. This is a kind of misinterpretation toward the concept of God. God never asks people to kill each other in the name of Him because He is spring of love.

As human beings who believe in the existence of God, the existence and religious diversity, we should increasingly understand the principle and the existence of God. So we will not hurt one another. And we should be able to learn about faith without any discrimination, we should emphasize what Christ says in the Bible; if you are not like a child, you will never attain Kingdom of Lord. The main character of the novels Anna; seven years old. To be a child means; celebration of life. A child does not have hatred to other people, a child do not think too much but just do as something simply.
