

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION

Percy's individuation process is divided by two main aspects which are conscious and unconscious. Percy's conscious is separated by two aspects which are psyche function and psyche attitude. Percy's psyche function can be categorized as thinking person and Percy's psyche attitude can be categorized as introvert person. So, in Jung Typologies Percy is included in Thinking Introvert type.

On the other hand, unconscious has two main aspects which are personal unconscious and collective unconscious. Percy's personal unconscious is his whole personal experience especially which he got in his quest to prevent the war between the Olympian's Big Three. Meanwhile, Percy's collective unconscious is dominated by two main ideas about Greek's Gods and the concept of Greek's hero. Percy's unconscious influence his consciousness through Percy's conscious manifestation which is described in symptom & complexes, dream, and archetype. Indeed, Percy has anima & animus, imago, and shadow as his other form of his unconscious. Percy's conscious and unconscious are related each other and build Percy's character. Moreover, the balancing between them brings Percy to overcome his shadow to reach the maturity.

After exploring Percy character and analyzing his strong points from Individuation process analysis that support him to be hero, the writer makes conclusion that Percy is deserved to be a hero although he is only a twelve year old boy because he can reach his maturity. So, he can make decision wisely and control his water hender power fluently. He can overcome his complexes and shadow. Then, he turns it bccome motivation to will never lose again. He also learns from his personal and collective unconscious so he will never scare or doubt in faces his enemy. He does not want anybody know his personal problem because he is an thinking introvert type and a hero saves his suffer for his own His persona show his confident and his loyal behavior that he is loved by his friends. Finally, all of these factors make him deserved to be a hero.
