

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION

In the story, during her hard life, Jori has a special need that is impossible to be fulfilled in the real life. It is to reunite with her father that she loved most. As a special power, magic can fulfill Jori's special need. Of course, it will not happen in the real world but in the magical world. The fact is Jori must deal with magic to fulfill her special needs to reunite with her father. As Jori enters the magical world, her maturity processes also begins.

As explained above, Jori's special need is to reunite with her father. In her deep heart, this is what she wants most. This is her happiness. This is the true happiness that will erase her pain. But, after a while drifting a meeting with her father in the magical world, Jori realizes that what she sees is just fantasy. Although the feeling she felt toward him in her heart is real, but her father is not real. Her father was dead in real life. In the magical world, the car accident that kills her father had never happened. She knows that she must decide between living out of fantasy with her father and Lisa by giving herself over to the dream or just let him go. After she understands the situation, Jori knows that she can not stay and throw away her real lives for something she wanted most. She thinks about her Mom who is waiting for them to be back home. This action becomes the one that influence her maturity most. In this part, Jori realizes and understands that the most important thing is not to throw away real lives no matter how hard it is. She must face it wisely. She must forgive her mistake and other's mistake too.

Jori is finally mature in reaching her goal to rescue people she loves in the magical world as explained by Jung's individuation process theory. At the beginning of her life story, Jori is a popular girl at school and has a happy family. She is a good girl. She cares to others and helps people greatly. Then, she was betrayed by her best friend and her father was killed by the car accident. This makes her life and also her personality changes. Happiness is replaced by the pain and suffering. She trusts no one anymore. She becomes a bad girl. In this part of her life, she learns and realizes about balancing her persona and her shadow, and also learns about balancing her attitude. After the adventure at the magical world, Jori learns much about life, about making decision, controlling and balancing between self and ego. She trusts no one; at the end get back what is lost, family, friendship and love. Finally, Jori realizes her Self, a complete individual who cares and understands about her life especially in making the right decision after her adventure in the magical world. She finds herself is saved from the destruction of life, not by others, but by herself. As she rescues her sister and friends in her magical world adventure, at the same time, she is also saves her own self. The journey to the magical world is the journey to the world of herself. Jori has no difference whether she is in the real life or in the magical world. Magical influence has no dominion over her. She is a realistic person in both worlds. What she wants most is the true happiness in her heart. This true happiness is when she found she fixed the problem inside herself. After her success to fix the problem inside her, then she can fix the problem outside her. She finally matured in reaching her goal to rescue her sister and friends in the magical world.

In conclusion, Jori reaches her maturity. Jori's maturity can be seen from her ability to forgive her mistakes and people around her. She accepts the reality of her life wisely. There is no more pain because of Marisa's betrayal, and no more anger and sadness because of her father's death.
