Comments to the Author

Please review the methodology section

Specify the mixed methodology which is not mentioned

Quantitative and qualitative methods were used there, where it should be shown how they make up the mixed methodology.

I recommend that the paper be published after these improvements

Success!

Comments to the Author

This manuscript presents the results of a survey about teachers' perspectives and beliefs relating to online learning in the Indonesian context. This study is interesting and well-structured; however, a number of points should be addressed before it can be recommended for publication in this journal.

Firstly, the title seems to promise a general study, but the manuscript clearly focuses on a small target group from a specific geographical region (Central Java, Indonesia). It is suggested that the title is amended to reflect this focus more accurately.

Secondly, related to this focus, more information should be provided about the general Indonesian context. It is to be remembered that the reader may be unfamiliar with this both at the macro level (e.g. about the country, its education system, and the role of English in elementary schools and elsewhere; relevant government measures during the COVID-19 pandemic etc.) as well as the micro level (if possible, provide additional information about the gender, length of service, qualifications etc. of the teachers surveyed, as well as the language of the interviews etc.).

Thirdly, the methodology section mentions terms (e.g. convenience sampling, triangulation, narrative analysis) without any definition or explanation. This should be strengthened by referencing the relevant chapters from social science methodology books. Data ethics and data collection (e.g., recording, transcription, and (if relevant) translation) should also be discussed here.

The level of English is good but further attention is needed (there are quite a few typos and several noun/verb agreements require checking). The formatting also needs to be looked at, especially in the bibliography.

A general observation is that the manuscript would benefit from more references. Given the topic, the bibliography should be much larger (at least 30-40 items), and include many more up to date sources (i.e. written within the last five years or so). There are many comparative studies focusing on the ways teachers in different countries have dealt with the shift to online learning (e.g., see articles in journals like Education and Information Technologies). In addition, given that one of the current references is in Indonesian, a further way of increasing the manuscript's relevance and importance would be to include and discuss other Indonesian-language sources (and which an international readership may otherwise find difficult to access).

This is an interesting and promising manuscript. Subject to the incorporation of the above suggestions, it could be recommended for publication in this journal.
