Bibliography ....................................................................................... xiii
Didimu was born on May 10, 1942. His father, Timothy Mwenekanyonyo Mwamalopa Arinani Chikowoka Kayira, and his mother, Ziya Nyakawonga, were members of the Tumbuka tribe in the small hill village of Mpale in the Karonga district of northern Nyasaland, which at the time was a British protectorate federated with Rhodesia. They were poor and illiterate. His father had never learned a trade and owned no cows, so the family ate from their 20 acre garden. Although living in a poor family, Didimu had a great dream. He dreamed to reach education as high as he could. He thought that the education was the only way to get his family out from poverty. Finally, he decided to go to America although he went there without any good preparations. In this thesis, the writer focuses in analyzing the development of Didimu’s personality in several steps based on age. The writer also reveals about the role of environments which really affects his personality development. Psychosocial theory by Erik. H Erikson will be applied in this thesis. Viewing from it, the personality of Didimu was developed normally. There are some environments which really help Didimu to develop his personality. They are Family, USIS (United States Information services), Skagit Valley College, and University of Washington.
